NOTES FROM THE DIRECTOR

When a person has been directing plays as long as I have, the search for something new and different can, at times, become rather frantic.

The play tonight, however, does not fall in that category. For years I have objected to the usual physical involvement of the audience with the actors because it has not been consistent throughout the show. For a few moments the actors would be a physical part of the audience, and then they would retreat again into their world of make believe with an aesthetic distance between them and me. I resolved that some day I would direct a show where this involvement between actors and audience would be definite and consistent. This, then, is that show.

The dinner format seemed a logical vehicle for this experiment, and so a number of new problems were created. Through the cooperation of some outstanding people, however, we have high hopes for success.

Tutti Sherlock volunteered to supervise the meal. Her assistance was desperately needed and beautifully executed as you can see.

Pam Johnson of our staff volunteered to design and supervise construction of the costumes. You can see for yourself the excellent job she did.

John Hardy, who is in the business of feeding people, was most kind and cooperative in catering the meat. Again we can let his product speak for itself. A nice way to express your appreciation for his support of a public school would be to tell him so the next time you order a meal from him.

In spite of this excellent help, we are still amateurs in this business so we may make some mistakes — but at least we dared.

Mr. J
